

Voice Artist Consent Framework

Consent, royalty and withdrawal

The principle

No voice model is built without the artist's written, specific and revocable consent. Not implied consent, not a clause buried in a session release.

What the artist signs

A consent that names the languages, the content types and the term. Anything outside that scope requires a fresh consent. Political content and advertising are excluded by default and require an explicit opt in.

Royalty

The artist is paid a session fee for the recordings used to build the model, and a royalty on every finished hour their voice model appears in. Royalty is paid whether the line was synthesised or re recorded.

Withdrawal

An artist may withdraw consent for any title, language or content type on 30 days notice. On withdrawal the model is retired and not used on any new work. Titles already published are unaffected, which is disclosed to the artist before they sign.

Why this is in the data room

An investor should assume this becomes a regulated area. We would rather be early and conservative than have to retrofit consent across 90 artists later.
